Scholarship

Books

Debating Sex Work Oxford University Press, 2019

In Debating Sex Work (Co-authored with Lori Watson) I defend the decriminalization of sex work. I focus on public health benefits of decriminalization and feminist arguments for sex workers' rights.

Reviewed in Ethical Theory and Moral Practice (2021)

Pharmaceutical Freedom Oxford University Press, 2017

In Pharmaceutical Freedom, I defend rights of self-medication, which include the right to purchase and use pharmaceuticals without a prescription and the right to use unapproved and recreational drugs.

GISME Junior Faculty Manuscript Workshop (2016)

Author Meets Critics—PPE Society Meeting (2018)

Author Meets Critics—Pacific APA (2018)

Reviewed in NDPR (2018)

Reviewed in the Journal of Applied Philosophy (2018)

Reviewed in the Journal of Value Inquiry (2018)

Special Issue symposium in HEC Forum (2022)

Books Under Contract

Reclaiming Pregnancy Oxford University Press (Under Contract)

In Reclaiming Pregnancy, I argue that pregnancy is supererogatory, meaning that it is good but not required. I first argue that creating a child is good for the child and for other people. Next, I argue that women are not required to create children, nor are they required to provide the highest-quality prenatal environment when they do. To close, I argue against coercive practices in obstetrics.

Why It's OK to Have Bad Spelling and Grammar Routledge (Under Contract)

In Why It's OK to Have Bad Spelling and Grammar I argue that the stigmatization of bad spelling and grammar is inefficient, unnecessary, and inequalitarian. This book will be published as part of the series "Why It's OK: The Ethics of How We Live."
