Ioannis Ladakis is a postdoctoral researcher in medical informatics at the Aristotle University of Thessaloniki, where he completed a Ph.D. on gamified environments for work stress reduction. Alongside this work, he develops an independent philosophical project in ontology, ethics, social criticism, and political theory. Engaging critically with the continental tradition, particularly Castoriadis, Debord, and existentialist thought, he writes on the dialectics of negation and becoming, the critique of mass society and spectacle, and the conditions of social and political freedom. His article “Pseudo-staticity and the architecture of depoliticization: Semantic normalization, fear, and juridical violence in late modernity” appeared in Thesis Eleven (2026). He also writes literary fiction in Greek.
